

Tudor's Army And Sweating Sickness

A map of Atherstone in 1763 shows Bloody Bank - said to be a cemetery where soldiers of Henry Tudor's army were buried after being stricken by sweating sickness. The fever is thought to have come from the continent with Henry's army when he landed at Milford Haven in 1485. Sick men were refused entry into Atherstone.

From the 'Metro' newspaper dated March 28 2002.